The parodies are spot-on, capturing Trump's unique blend of bluster, narcissism, and ignorance. From Birtherism to the Big Lie

Mad Magazine's coverage of the Trump presidency began with his birtherism conspiracy theory. In a parody of the classic Mad Magazine feature "Snappy Answers to Stupid Questions," Mad Magazine asked, "Is Barack Obama a secret Muslim born in Kenya?" The answer: "No, but Donald Trump is a secret Martian born in a swamp."

As Trump's campaign progressed, Mad Magazine continued to lampoon his ignorance, his racism, and his sexism. In one parody, Trump is shown giving a speech in which he says, "I'm a very stable genius. I know more about ISIS than the generals. And I'm going to build a big, beautiful wall on the bFree Download and make Mexico pay for it."

After Trump was elected, Mad Magazine's parodies became even more pointed. In one issue, Trump is shown sitting in the Oval Office with a giant MAGA hat on his head. He's surrounded by yes-men who are all nodding their heads in agreement. The caption reads, "The inmates are running the asylum."

Mad Magazine's coverage of the Trump presidency culminated in a special issue посвященный the release of the Mueller Report. The issue featured a parody of the report's s, which found that Trump had obstructed justice and colluded with Russia. The parody concluded with the words, "The president is a crook."
