Nain, situated on the northern tip of the Labrador peninsula, was a thriving Inuit community with a rich cultural heritage. The photographs in this collection provide a glimpse into the everyday lives of the Inuit people, their traditions, and their connection to the land. We see images of children playing on the ice, women sewing sealskin clothing, and men hunting seals and walruses.

The photographs also capture the unique landscape of Nain and its surroundings. We see towering icebergs, vast snow-covered plains, and the rugged coastline that shaped the lives of the Inuit people. The images provide a sense of the beauty and the challenges of living in this remote and unforgiving environment.

This collection of photographs is not just a historical record; it is a testament to the resilience and spirit of the Inuit people. The images capture the strength of their community, their ability to adapt to change, and their deep connection to their land and traditions.

A Photographer's Perspective

The photographs in this collection were taken by Dr. James Houston, a renowned photographer and anthropologist who spent many years living and working among the Inuit people. Houston's photographs are not only beautiful works of art, but they also provide a valuable record of Inuit culture and history.

Houston's passion for the Inuit people is evident in his photographs. He captured their daily lives with sensitivity and respect, and his images provide a unique insight into their world. The photographs in this collection are a testament to Houston's skill as a photographer and his deep understanding of the Inuit people.

A Lasting Legacy

The photographs in this collection are a valuable resource for anyone interested in Inuit culture and history. They provide a glimpse into a way of life that is rapidly disappearing, and they help us to understand the challenges and triumphs of the Inuit people.

This collection of photographs is a lasting legacy of the Inuit people of Nain, Nunatsiavut, Newfoundland and Labrador, Canada. It is a reminder of their strength, their resilience, and their deep connection to their land and traditions.
